Occurrence in 10% of a demographically homogenous population of children living in the same region. To determine whether a cohort of children of less than 3 years of age, who were living in a defined geographical region, had an increased prevalence of juvenile idiopathic arthritis. The study

comprised 161 consecutive children, aged less than 3 years, presenting with juvenile idiopathic arthritis to the paediatric clinic of the Medical Centre of Central Finland. All children had been residing in the southern part of the country at the time of diagnosis. The diagnosis was based on clinical criteria and laboratory tests performed to exclude r 3e33713323
