Q: What makes a website a mobile site and not a mobile app? I've been reading around different types of sites that can be built and run as both a mobile site and a mobile app. It seems that it is not a single rule like "if it's a site than it must be a mobile app", but a series of guidelines that I think are to make a distinction between the two and that I might not get (feel free to correct me if I'm wrong). So: if the content or screen size cannot be optimized for smaller screens, does that make the site or the app? if the content or screen size is optimized for smaller screens, does that make the site or the app? if the content and screen size is larger than the size of a mobile phone screen, does that make the site or the app? if the content and screen size is smaller than the size of a mobile phone screen, does that make the site or the app? if the content and screen size is equal to a mobile phone screen, is the site still a mobile app? if the site is super simple, does that make it a mobile app? is it enough for a site to have one unified story when I click the back button on the phone to go to the site's front page? what defines a mobile app for (some of you might have a different answer for iOS than Android)? Thanks a lot in advance A: Mobile Apps An app is designed to be installed as a piece of software onto a mobile device and that's it. The app is tightly connected to the mobile device (i.e. it cannot be run on a different device). Most of the time an app will have a single UI, meaning that there's a single window/screen of content and all the interactions are made through it. Most of the time an app will open from the home screen, rather than a website that gets turned into an app. To get to another screen the app will be closed and the next screen will be opened. Mobile Sites A mobile site cannot be run on another device. A mobile site can be designed to work well on small screens and will usually be based on a 'responsive' design. This means that it will look better and display much of the content in a different way on mobile devices. For example it might be displayed in a different way from the desktop version, display more content on a single page without the

Steamboat Springs ☞ Officials from the Divide Trail Foundation are putting together an appeal to persuade the Steamboat Springs Ski & Recreation District to add chairlift service on the New Moon and Solitario trails from Jan. 1 to May 15 to help raise money to purchase a shorter lift span. The $1.5 million appeal will be filed today with the mountain's board of directors. It will be presented to the board at the Jan. 2 board meeting. The appeal is not expected to draw much controversy. Finance Director Mark Schrimmer said the district's lowest possible cost for the lift span would be in the $4 million range but in the next fiscal year, the district would also need to factor in a $200,000 payment to replace the lift span. Jim Overton, a lawyer and a member of the board of directors for the board, said the board members are open to any plan that would continue all-day lift service throughout the ski season and get the district out of a financial hole. Overton said the board has asked to see a detailed economic plan before choosing a plan. If the district moved forward with the plan, the district would negotiate to add season passes and charging fees for day permits. "If they are able to put together a plan that provides additional chairlift service that will stay open throughout the winter season, while still providing for some good value there is a lot we would have to consider," Overton said. Overton said more access to New Moon, a trail that was declared a permanent snow-making road in February, would benefit the visitors who use the trail. Overton said the first chairlift service on the trail cost $300,000 and 20 public meetings helped get the project completed with no significant public opposition. "The additional lift span will open up that trail and further connect the West Side Trail to the Yampa Valley Trail. In addition it will also connect the Steamboat Summer Festival to the ski hill," Overton said. "The more trails that are linked together the better." Overton said it would be easy to just extend the chairlift from the popular Snowmass Village resort down to Empire without building a lift span to serve Empire. The most expensive option is to build a three-level lift span, Schrimmer said. Construction costs are estimated to be about $11 million for the lift span and $10 million for additional
